INTERNAL COLLABORATION THREAD

Had a customer ask why the financing cost on their draw looked higher than an APR they saw from another lender. What's the approved language for explaining that these aren't directly comparable?

I'm getting questions about early payoff too. A customer asked whether paying a draw off early changes what they owe. I wasn't confident explaining it.

Customer wanted us to increase their credit limit because they'd already used most of their available credit. They didn't understand the difference between restoring available credit by repaying a draw and increasing the total approved limit.

Someone thought connecting their bank account meant we were evaluating their personal checking history. We probably need clearer language explaining that the connected account should be the business account and what information is being reviewed.

Had an upset customer who was declined even though they said they have excellent personal credit. I didn't have a clean way to explain that qualification considers the business's financial activity and isn't based on personal credit alone.

One more: customer asked whether there are restrictions on how the funds can be used — specifically whether they could use a draw for payroll or inventory. I couldn't find anything definitive in the product brief.

Note: The use-of-funds question raised at 10:46 AM is not answered anywhere in the supplied source material. This is a genuine, unresolved content gap.
